

Get to know the Pedagogy of Humanity

Key concept: Hand up, not a Hand Out

A home does not stand by leaning on a single pillar. So, too, do we need many hands to hold us up. Seeking connection, help, is one of the most basic human instincts that has allowed us to survive as a species. There is no shame in recognizing the boundaries of our own capacity.

Yet we've been taught that strength means standing alone. That we should learn to stand on our own two feet; that accepting support is weakness. But pity says, "You can't do it."

Love says, 'I'll lift you up until you have the strength to stand on your own.'

This is a core message of the Pedagogy of Humanity. We act to support one another, not because we pity others, but because we understand that we need each other. When one member of our human village suffers, it reduces the capacity of the whole village. A hand up, then, sees those who are in need not as objects of pity, not as having failed, but recognizes that sometimes, we just need compassion.

It's a hand up, not a hand out.

Life happens to all of us. We survive through connection and the kindness of others. Our future depends on it.

How will you impact the future?

Because safety is the highest form of love | Schedule your free consult today:

(681)-210-3589 | pedagogyofhumanity.com | blstratton@pedagogyproducts.com